How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

From October 1, 2025, through March 31, 2026, the Fund's Class A shares (TCBAX) returned +4.82%, outperforming the S&P 500 Index, which returned -1.79%. The Fund slightly underperformed its benchmark, the CBOE S&P 500 BuyWrite Index (the "BuyWrite Index"), which returned +5.55%.

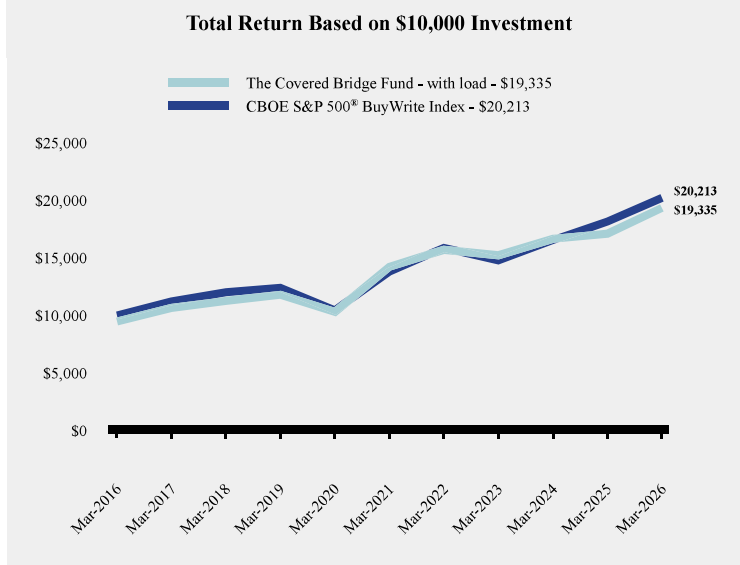

Given the overall market declined during the period, elevated volatility created an attractive opportunity for option premium to contribute meaningfully to total return. This was a significant driver of performance. The BuyWrite Index is 100% overwritten, while the Fund typically targets approximately 50% covered call exposure. The Adviser believes this structure offers greater upside potential while still generating attractive income from option premium. That tradeoff becomes even more important in periods marked by sharp pullbacks followed by quick recoveries.

The Fund's underlying equity holdings also contributed to performance. Dividend-oriented stocks outperformed growth stocks during the reporting period. With energy prices rising amid geopolitical friction, Schlumberger, Exxon Mobil, and Chevron were among the strongest contributors. Intel also gained traction as investor focus shifted toward domestic semiconductor manufacturing. Dollar General was another top performer, as the company appears well positioned to benefit from increasingly cost-conscious consumers.

On the other hand, there was a pause in the software and services space, with Microsoft, Salesforce, and Accenture among the lagging performers during the period. General Mills and Nike also performed below expectations as their management teams continue adapting product offerings to changing consumer demand. While valuations in some of these holdings appear attractive, the Adviser continues to monitor them closely.

The Adviser believes there is still a long runway ahead for dividend-focused investors. Elevated yields and higher volatility should continue to provide attractive income opportunities, and the Adviser believes maintaining a diversified approach remains the best way to navigate the market going forward.
